

Nick Ponce
10/29/2017
CPE 350

List of Personal Goals

1. Create one or more self-motivated projects in my free time.

I had already begun developing my own social media app game over the summer, but the progress on that came to a halt when school began. I wish to create more things on my own time that matter to me because that is how you discover what you like, what interests you, and what doesn't. It also helps with getting jobs.

2. Develop teamwork skills such as communication and group decision making skills.

I wasn't quite sure how to word this one, but one thing I noticed I was severely lacking in when the group work in this class began was making decisions as part of a group. Without a clear dictator-like leader decisions take much too long to make. I have only worked that way in previous group work and it has taken some getting use to. As of now decisions and planning take far too long. And fully understanding what others are suggesting takes time as well. So far only working with a team, the same team, has cause any improvement on that front. I believe I just need more experience in order to increase in team competency.

3. Use my free time more productively for more interesting things.

As of now most of what I do with my free time is just sleeping or talking with friends. I would like to do more interesting things like learning how to cook meals that taste like real food. Reading, hiking, exercising, rock climbing and working on my own projects are examples of what I could possibly do.

4. Call my parents more.

I recently realized I haven't seen my family in almost a year and I call maybe twice a month at most. I'd like to make calling them a more commonly occurring event.